FIRE COLLEGE PERSONNEL RECEIVE AWARDS

Two Fire College instructors were honored recently at the Alabama Water and Pollution Control Association convention held in Mobile. Ken Baugher from Decatur received The Charles White Award for water control. Charles Faulk from Selma was honored with The Bolton-Crockett-Beck Award for wastewater control. These are the highest awards made by the Association toward the advancement of water and wastewater.

"This was a real honor for our people and for the college," said Bob Hagler, director of the Fire College. "This is the first time for our people to win both of these awards."

SHELTON INSTRUCTOR NAMED OUTSTANDING IN THE STATE

Melvin Corder, instructor of computerized numerical control of the Technical Division of Shelton State Community College, was named the Outstanding Teacher of 1983 for the Technical-Trade and Industrial Education in Postsecondary Education for the State of Alabama.

Computerized numerical control has been one of the most popular programs at the college. Last fall Cincinnati Millicron, a nationwide machine tool manufacturer, donated a vertical computerized numerical control machining center valued at more than $100,000. The program has been closely associated with the Tuscaloosa County Industrial Development Authority and The Chamber of Commerce of West Alabama in efforts to attract new industry to the area.
